Game Pieces

The wooden dominoes set contains 28 dominoes with every possible combination of halves containing from zero to six dots on each side. The pieces are 0-0, 0-1, 0-2, 0-3, 0-4, 0-5, 0-6, 1-1, 1-2, 1-3, 1-4, 1-5, 1-6, 2-2, 2-3, 2-4, 2-5, 2-6, 3-3, 3-4, 3-5, 3-6, 4-4, 4-5, 4-6, 5-5, 5-6, 6-6.

Setting up

To begin, all of the dominoes should be laid out face-down on the table and mixed up to shuffle them. Then, each player takes one domino, with the highest domino determining who goes first. After a re-shuffle, each player draws seven dominoes in a two-player game and five dominoes in three- to four-player games. The rest of the dominoes are left face-down in a central draw pile known as "the boneyard." The first player places a single domino in the centre of the table, called "the set."

Game Rules

To play a domino during your turn, you must possess a domino that matches the end of the set. For example, if the end is a six, you must have a domino with a six on one side to play it. Matching ends are lined up in a straight line, unless table space becomes an issue. In these cases, you can match the ends but have the played domino change direction at a right-angle. Double-sided dominoes should be played vertically across the current line of play, but otherwise function in the same way as regular dominoes.

1. Dominoes is played by two or more people.
1. Players can draw from the boneyard whenever they don't possess a playable domino.
2. If the drawn domino also can't be played, they must continue drawing until a playable domino is drawn.
3. The object is to play all of your dominoes before the other players.
4. The game ends when a player has played all dominoes in his/her hand. Alternately, the game also ends if the boneyard is empty and no one has a playable domino left in their hand.
5. The dots on each player's unplayed dominoes are counted, with the lowest number of dots being the winning hand.
6. In multi-round games, the winner of the majority of rounds wins the overall game; for example, winning two out of three rounds.
